Forecast For Northwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Tuesday 02 Feb 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Heavy snow and rain, a risk of ice and flooding.

Today:
Snow, at times heavy bringing accumulations inland and over high ground. Turning to rain at lower levels through the day, with the risk of freezing rain for a time, potentially bringing icy stretches. During afternoon turning milder with heavy showers. Maximum temperature 7 deg C (45 deg F).

Tonight:
During the evening and overnight heavy showers will continue north, potentially merging to longer spells of rain and hill snow. Gradually turning drier in the south. Windy. Minimum temperature -1 deg C (30 deg F).

Wednesday:
Rain and hill snow lingering in the north on Wednesday with drier spells in the south. Cloudy for all with further outbreaks of rain and showers arriving later. Maximum temperature 9 deg C (48 deg F).

Outlook for Thursday to Saturday:
Spells of rain and hill snow on Thursday with drier periods further south. Further outbreaks of rain and hill snow mixed with drier intervals on Friday and Saturday, becoming colder.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.